

“ I want you to know how my heart was warmed and spirits lifted yesterday morning when your amazing group spent the morning trimming, cleaning up, mulching and planting pots. They were terrific. I am so appreciative of being the recipient of such a lovely and generous gesture, and privileged to be part of a project that is such a model of community service.”
 – SS, Columbus

Helping Hands in the Garden is an organization that assists breast cancer patients with clean-up of their garden. It was created by Columbus State Alumnus and breast cancer survivor, Elaine Euwer along with fellow Columbus State Alumnus, Debbie Fisher. Elaine experienced first hand the comfort that garden tending with friends can provide in a time of need.

Helping Hands in the Garden

assisting breast cancer patients with their gardens

We are a group of volunteers who work, teach or are students in the Landscape Industry. Our group also includes High School students, Garden Club members and cancer survivors. We are dedicated to helping people with breast cancer by caring for their gardens, free of charge, while they undergo treatment for breast cancer. Developed by a survivor who knows the many therapeutic benefits of gardening, this program was created with love and care of the community in mind.

Gardening is an activity that supports our physical, mental and emotional selves. Being surrounded by plants and connected with the Earth is a path to better health. Let us take care of your gardens while you devote your time to healing. We welcome your participation to the extent that you are able: from helping to simply sitting and watching.

*"I am in the midst of my second chemotherapy regimen for breast cancer and learned of your amazingly caring and lovely project... First, let me say, this is one of the most caring and uplifting ideas I can imagine."
- JA, Columbus*
